HUMANITIES

POSITION: Humanities Teacher

DESCRIPTION: St. Paul’s School’s interdisciplinary Humanities curriculum both includes and transcends the traditional disciplines. This program helps students develop the passion for inquiry essential to a healthy and examined life. Students are challenged to become engaged citizens and responsible leaders in an increasingly complex and globalized world. They creatively interact with and draw connections between diverse “texts.” Faculty collaboration and ongoing innovation are hallmarks of the Humanities program. The interdisciplinary study is based on a developmentally appropriate model that fosters an understanding of self, community, the natural world, and the divine.

The faculty member will teach two sections of the Humanities core curriculum and an elective each term. Faculty members in the Humanities Division value collegiality; candidates for a Humanities Division position must be willing to work closely with a team of teachers. Humanities teachers place a priority on development of skills related to rigorous classroom discussion of course content, scholarly research, writing, and critical reading and reasoning.

EDUCATION: Masters Degree or higher preferred

EXPERIENCE: A minimum of 3-5 years of teaching experience at the secondary school level within a Humanities discipline, which includes the integration of history and English. Outstanding candidates will have experience teaching global studies and/or economics. Familiarity with classroom technology and a desire to embrace the unique Humanities model at St. Paul’s School are essential.
